Description:

In this captivating novella by Dawn Crandall, Nicholette Everstone is already a widow at the age of twenty-two: her husband was murdered on their wedding day. She has just returned to Boston after two years of mourning in Europe. Although her husband was loving, the marriage was an arranged one, and Nicholette would like to wed again—this time for love...and to someone safe.

Cal Hawthorne has been interested in Nicholette for years. But right now, he's busy helping the police trying to catch his rotten cousin, who has tricked young women into prostitution in Maine. Cal is also living under an assumed name; his late father left his fortune to his secret mistress and their six young children.

Is Cal's work too risky for Nicholette to pin her hopes on him? And will her heart be strong enough to keep her fears of "what if" at bay?
